THE STORY OF THE BELL.

Translated from the German.
BY ELARA CUSHMAN.

The village was small, and the church was not a cathedral, but a quiet, unostentatious stone chapel, half covered by climbing plants, and a forest of dark trees grew round it. They shaded the interior so completely in the summer afternoons that the figure of the altar-piece, painted, the villagers averred, by Albrecht Dürer—could scarcely be distinguished, and rested upon the broad canvas a mass of shadowy outline.

A quaint carved bell-ringer stood above the trees, and in the bright dawn of the Sabbath a chime sweet and holy floated from it, calling the villagers to their devotions; but the bell whose tongue gave forth that chime was not the bell that my story speaks of—there was another, long before that was cast, that had hung for many years, perhaps a century in the same place. But now it is no longer elevated, its tongue is mute, for it lies upon the ground at the foot of the church tower, broken and bruised. It is half buried in the rich mould, and there green stains creeping over it, eating into its iron heart, no one heeds it now, for those who brought it there are sleeping coldly and silently all around in the church-yard. The shadow of those dark trees rests on many graves.

How came the old bell to be thus neglected? A new generation arose—"See," they said, "the church where our parents worshipped falls to decay. Its tower crumbles to dust. The bell has lost its silver tone—it is cracked, it is broken. We will have a new tower, and another bell shall call us to our worship."

So the old bell was destroyed, and the old bell laid at the foundation; it was grieved at the cruel sentence, but it seemed to complain, it was voiceless. They came week after to remove it—the remains would still be of use; but strive as they would, no strength was able to raise the bell, it had grown ponderous—it defied them—rooted to the earth as it seemed.

"They cannot make me leave my post," thought the bell—"I will still watch over this holy spot, it has been my care for years."

Time passed, and they strove no longer to remove the relic. Its successor rang clearly from the tower above its head, and the old bell slumbered on, in the warm sunshine, and the dreary storm, unmolested, and almost forgotten.

The afternoon was calm, but the sun's rays were most powerful. A bright, noble boy had been walking listlessly under the whispering trees. He was in high health and was resting from eager exercise, for there was a flush upon his open brow, and as he walked he wiped the beaded drops from his forehead.

"Ah, here is the place," he said; "I will be down in this cool shade, and read this pleasant volume." The rays of Hans Sachs were in his hand. So the youth stretched his weary limbs upon the velvet grass, and his head rested near the old bell, but he did not know it, for there was a low shrub with thick serrated leaves and fragrant blossoms spreading over it, and the youth did not care to look beyond.

Presently the letters in his book began to grow indistinct, there was a mist creeping over the page, and while he wondered at the marvel, a low clear voice spoke to him. Yes, it called his name, "Norvalis."

"I am here," said the lad, though he could see no one. He glanced upward and around, yet there was no living creature in sight.

"Listen," said the voice. "I have not spoken to mortal for many, many years. My voice was hushed at thy birth. Come, I will tell thee of it." The youth listened, though he was sadly amazed. He felt bound to the spot, and he could not close his ears.

"Time has passed swiftly," said the voice, "since I watched the children who are now men and women, at their sports in the neighboring forest. I looked out from my station in the old tower, morning and evening beheld with joy those innocent faces, as they ran and bounded in wild delight, fearless of the future, and careless of the present hour. They were all my children, for I had rejoiced at their birth, and it was ordained that the Good Shepherd early called one of the lambs to his bosom, I tolled not mournfully, but solemnly at the departure. I knew it was far better for those who slept thus peacefully, and I could not sorrow for them."

"I marked one, a fair, delicate girl, who often separated herself from her merry companions. She would leave her noisy play, and stealing with her book and work through the dark old trees, would sit for hours in the shadow of the tower. Though she never came without a volume, such an one as just now you were reading, the book was often neglected, and leaning her head upon her hand, she would remain until the twilight tenderly veiled her beautiful form, wrapt in deep, still musing. I knew that her thoughts were holy and pure; often of heaven, for she would raise her eyes to the bending spire, jeweled as it was in the evening hour, and seem in prayer, though her lips moved not, and the listening breezes could not catch a murmured word."

"But the girl grew up, innocent as in her childhood, yet with a rosiest flush upon her cheeks and a brighter lustre in her dreamy eye. I did not see her so often then, but when my voice on the bright Sabbath morning came to those who love the good Father mercy and goodness, she was the first to obey the summons, and I watched the snowy drapery which she always wore, as it fluttered by the dark foliage, or gleamed in the glad sunshine. She did not come alone, for her grandeur ever leaned upon her arm, and she guided his uncertain steps, and listened anxiously to the words of wisdom which he spoke. Then I marked that often another joined the group, a youth who had been her companion years ago, when she was a very child. Now they did not stray away, with arms entwined, and hand linked in hand; but the youth supported the grandeur, and she walked beside him, looking kindly upon the ground, and if by chance he spoke to her, a bright glow would arise to her lips and forehead."

"Never did my voice ring out for a merrier bridal than on the morn when they were united, before the altar of this very church. All the village rejoiced with them, for the gentle girl was loved as a sister, and a daughter all said that the youth to whom she had plighted her troth was well worthy of the jewel he had gained. The old praised, and the young admired as the bridal party turned toward their home, a simple, vine-shaded cottage, not a stone's throw from where thou art lying. They did not forget the God who had bestowed so much of happiness upon them even in the midst of pleasure, and often they would come in the hush of twilight, and kneeling by the altar give thanks for all the mercies they had received."

"Two years—long as the period may seem to youth—glided swiftly past when the heart is not at rest. Then once more a chime floated from the belfry. It was at early dawn, when the mist was lying on the mountain's side, and the dew did tremble in the flower bell, frightened by the first beams of the rising day—A son had been given to them a bright beautiful babe with eyes blue as the mother's who clasped him to her breast and dedicated him with the first breath to the parent who had watched over her orphan youth, and had given this treasure to her keeping."

"That bright day faded, and even came sadly upon the face of nature. Deep and mournful was the tone which I flung upon the passing wind; and the fir trees of the forest sent back a moan from their swaying as if for very sympathy. Life was that day given, but another had been recalled. The young mother's deep sleep was not broken even by the wailing voice of her first born, for it was the repose of death."

"They laid her beside the very spot where she had passed so many hours; and then I knew it was the grave of her parents which she had so loved to visit."

"The son lived, and the father's grief abated when he saw the boy growing in the image of his mother; and when the child, with uncertain footsteps, had dared to tread upon the velvet grass, the father brought him to the church-yard, and clasping his little hands as he knelt beside him, taught the babe that he had also a Father in Heaven."

"I have lain since that time almost by his side, for my pride was humbled when they removed me from the station I had so long occupied. My voice has been hushed from that sorrowful night even till now, but I am compelled to speak to thee."

"Boy! boy! I am thy mother of whom I have told thee. Two lives were given for thee: thy mother who brought thee into the world—thy Saviour who would give thee a second—they have died that thou might live; and for so great a sacrifice might will be required of thee! See to it that thou art not found wanting when a reckoning is required of thee."

Suddenly as it had been borne to his ears the voice became silent. The boy started as if from deep sleep, and put his hand to his brow. The dew lay dapply upon it, the shades of evening had crept over the church-yard; and he could scarce discern the white slab that marked the resting place of his mother. It may have been a dream—but when he searched about for the old bell, it was lying with its lip very near to the fragrant pillow upon which he had reposed.

Thoughtfully and slowly the boy went toward his home, but though he told none, not even his father, what had befallen him, the story of the old bell was never forgotten, and his future life was influenced by its remembrance.

COAL DEPOT.

Lenox's Wharf, near the Long Bridge.

THE Subscriber would respectfully inform his patrons and the public that he is receiving daily the above article of its various kinds and qualities, (which will make his present stock equal to any in the District,) consisting of Butler, Red Ash, Pine Knot, Broad Mountain, Clover Hill, suitable for Cooking ranges, radiators, grates, furnaces, etc.

I have had, at considerable expense, my yard planked, and have erected a commodious shed for the preservation of the coal from the dust and weather, and would state to those persons who may obtain their stock of me in the fall that, in case of quantity purchased should be found not sufficient for the season, (as is the case very frequently,) only a small advance will be made on the price to supply the deficiency.

I would request the citizens generally to call before making their purchases, as I am resolved to dispose of the article at reasonable rates.

N. B. Each load accompanied by the certificate of a sworn weigher.

Orders will be received at the "Butler Coal Office," Mr. S. E. Masolett's Drug Store, on Pennsylvania Avenue, opposite to the Hotel, or they may be left with Mr. John F. Callan, Drug Store, corner of 7th and E streets; (either of whom will receipt for me,) through the post-office; or at the yard, on 13th street, near the Long Bridge.

CHEAT AND GROW RICH.

THIS has been the secret principle of too many of the wholesale dealers in Tea up to this time, and they have been the most successful impostors on the Tea Merchant without any fear of detection. But a new era in the Tea Trade has come, and the Tea Merchant claims the honor of its introduction. They were the first to raise the banner of Reform, on which it has inscribed the simple words:

"PURE TEA AT HONEST PRICES."

A complete revolution has been the consequence. Let consumers of Tea everywhere look at what we have done.

1st. We were the first to send them Tea that would be called good for them before.

2d. We have delivered the market a vast amount of trash, and introduced a better class of Tea than has ever yet been sold. Importers of Tea often come to us to get for their own use, and for their friends, fine qualities they can find nowhere else.

3d. We have reduced prices more than 25 per cent. both in Black and Green Tea. The wholesale grocers say we are ruining the trade and call us humbugs. This we have done already, and now we have more to do.

1st. We will sell Tea by the single chest, half chest or 14 pound box, at the same price that wholesale grocers pay to the importers when they buy by the hundred packages.

2d. The wholesale grocers allow only 13 or 14 cents to 14 pounds tea to the half chest. This is a cheat. We allow, in most instances, 15 and 16 cents, from six to twelve cents per pound cheaper than the wholesale grocers do.

How can we do this? asks the country merchant. This is our answer. We are content with seven percent profit instead of 25 and 50 percent, a la wholesale grocers.

We deserve the thanks of the country merchants for saving them hereafter from being cheated. Let them come to the Warehouse of the Pekin Tea Company, and compare samples of Tea they get elsewhere, and if they buy bad Tea then at high prices it is their own fault.

An English importer lately boasted to us that he could make more money by sending bad Tea to the New York market, than on good Tea. We are resolved to overthrow this fraud, and now call upon agents in every town in the United States to come and buy Tea imported by the Pekin Tea Company, and we pledge ourselves, that if in six months they do not sell more Tea than the oldest and largest dealers in the town, we will give them our Tea without charge. This is plain English and cannot be misunderstood. We appeal for testimony to the immense success of our Agents in every part of the United States.

Agents wanted in every town in the United States for the sale of these Teas, by which they can make money, and confer a benefit upon the public by supplying the pure article.

CATALOGUE OF TEAS
ON SALE AT THE WAREHOUSE OF THE PEKIN TEA COMPANY, 75 & 77 Fulton Street, New York.

"The Tea mentioned in this Catalogue, are done up in quarter pound, half pound and one pound packages—the first or inside wrapper is lead, the second wrapper is water proof paper, and the third or outside wrapper is of Chinese rice paper. The Company sell none but good tea, done up in this superior manner all their goods in the most luxurious and elegant manner. Country dealers may select as small a quantity of each kind as they like, and have them packed in one chest. These also come in five pound Chinese packages, called 'Gaiwan' tea, a very convenient and portable shape.

[Persons in any part of the United States of Canada, can order any of the Teas in this Catalogue, by letter, in quantities to suit their wishes. We send them in boxes and deliver them to the Forwarding Merchant free of charge for packing in cartage. The money should always accompany the order.]
